Persian war of Artaxerxes.

The schism raged in Rome (Quinson) itself and intensified the already existing division within the Church. Theodoric proceeded with the greatest Caution in this protracted dispute. Again and again there was bloodshed and murder in the streets of Rome, but Theodoric held back. He placed himself at the service of the Council of 502 and merely tried to treat the symptoms by charging both comites with the task of reestablishing order. The source of the dispute itself, the quarrel between two popes over the legitimacy of their respective elections, he left untouched until the death of one settled the dispute
